Red Dowling and Herr Von Kewalt, Chief of Protocol of the German Foreign Office, met me at the station in Bad Godesberg at eight o'clock this morning. I breakfasted with Red and his charming wife.

Attached is a memorandum I drafted tonight for Jim Conant on some of my activities during the day. (See A, attached)

I neglected to mention in the memorandum Adenauer's comment that he thought the Churchill speech, insofar as it concerned a German military contribution, would have a harmful effect.

During the afternoon I called on Derek Hoyer-Millar and had an agreeable conversation with him. I also had several telephone talks with Phil and Kay Graham, who are leaving tonight for Berlin.

Just before dinner, which I took with the Dowlings, who had half a dozen interesting German guests, I saw Hallstein again and had a conversation with him which is reflected by the following telegram COLED No. 62, from Paris dated October 1

"Late yesterday evening in Bonn Hallstein came to see me on instructions of Chancellor to discuss paragraph three of proposed reply to Russian note given him that afternoon by Hoyer Millar. He said Chancellor understood my statement to him earlier in the day that I was without competence to give an opinion regarding the note, nor did it lie within field of my responsibilities. However, Chancellor felt that if I shared his apprehensions as to the dangers inherent from an EDC standpoint in last sentence of British draft of paragraph three,
